Stockholm World Water Week 2025: Asia Pacific Focus

3. Asia's Water-Energy-Food-Ecosystem Future: Harmonizing Hydropower with Nature-Based Solutions

26 August (Tues) 11:00 - 12:30 CEST (Room C1, Level 2 and Online)

Session Description

This session examines the interplay between hydropower and nature-based solutions (NbS) within the water-energy-food-ecosystem (WEFE) nexus, focusing on ecosystem services, climate risks, and the management of floods and droughts in Asia. It highlights the importance of land use planning at the river basin and regional levels, as well as governance approaches that balance WEFE trade-offs while protecting biodiversity and safeguarding vulnerable communities.

Across Asia, water, energy, and food security challenges are intensifying under the pressures of climate change, with floods and droughts becoming more frequent and severe. Hydropower remains a key contributor to renewable energy, irrigation, and water management, yet poorly planned projects can damage ecosystems, displace communities, and undermine long-term sustainability. Integrating hydropower development with NbS offers a pathway to resilient, equitable, and environmentally sound growth.

This session will explore how to move from sector-specific strategies toward a truly integrated WEFE nexus approach—one that accounts for climate risks, socio-cultural resilience, and ecological sustainability. Speakers from each Asian subregion will share practical experiences, tools, and innovations that demonstrate how hydropower and NbS can work together to enhance WEFE security and strengthen community resilience and secure Asia's long-term water, food, energy, and environmental future.
